What is GEfIL and the Independent Research Project?

The University of Tokyo's Global Education for Innovation and Leadership (GEfIL) is a minor degree program for a select group of 3rd and 4th year undergraduates, who have a keen interest in global issues and are eager to become the global 'change-makers' of tomorrow. GEfIL is taught entirely in English and consists of four components: the core course "Independent Research Project", a "Global Leader Lecture Series", the "GEfIL Abroad Program", and "GEfIL Designated Course(s)". Teaching commenced in January 2016 with the Phase 1 workshops of the GEfIL core course "Independent/Practical Research Project."

The GEfIL Independent Research Project forms the centerpiece of this program and focuses on critical contemporary issues. The GEfIL Independent Research Project course consists of two parts: Phase 1 aims to provide students with transdisciplinary research skills, communication and presentation skills in English as well as team-building and teamwork competencies. To this end, Phase 1 employs a project-based approach. In Phase 2, students embark on their own Independent Research Projects within one of five large thematic fields under the guidance of an 'Expert Mentor' and with the assistance of postgraduate Teaching Assistants.
